Tells How Discharged Soldiers Were Slain 55 Years Ago Today

Today marks the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Centralia massacre, and of the battle which followed it, said by some historians to be the bloodiest battle of the Civil War...

"Bill" Anderson was the organizer of the band. Anderson started eight other bands...

Anderson Famous Band. After the fight at Goddard's Lane on September 23, Anderson organized a band of six guerrillas...

The band marched to Randolph county where they attacked Ation and his Union forces...

The biggest fight we ever had was at Centralia," Stewart says.

It was just about 10 o'clock on the morning of September 22, fifty-five years ago...

Anderson went direct to the Eldorado House, one of the hotels, where he began talking to the proprietor...

"This is a fine location, doctor a good place for a fight."

For college men, business men, professional men, men of sports...

Doclor Sneed was robbed of his pocketbook and watch by a band of men... The train was delayed by the fight...

The passengers were questioned and then released. The arrival of the train at 11:30 o'clock from St. Louis prevented a thorough search of Hollins and sheriff Waugh...

The engine, seeing the mob tried to run the train through the town, but they were thrown in front of the engine and the fireman badly wounded...

"The soldiers of the Union were gathered up by the people of the village and taken to Centralia. A long night's election was held over...

"I was never really wounded but once. That was at Fayette. The federal soldiers shot at my feet against the curb, my shoulder being hurt badly...

"I got all of our provisions from the people who lived around this section. There was no rationing...

"We let the federals know by the whistles and they came under the trees near Columbia. When Johnson and his men came through Centralia the citizens warned him not to continue.

"But he brought his men down here, and we killed the most of them. That was because we were armed so much better than the federals. Each of us had from six to eight pistols, while the Union soldiers carried only powder and ball muskets.

"Two-thirds of the Federals were shot through the head. The last man killed was shot by Frank James. We could have gotten him sooner, but he was on the best horse, and we were afraid that he would kill it too.

The toss of a new half dollar by Coach John P. Miller in Rothwell Gymnasium last night elected Anton Stankowski captain of the football team...

The election lasted thirty minutes, much longer than the average Tiger voting contests, a choice usually being made on the first ballot. Each Miller tried several ballots after the vote had become a three to three deadlock to see if any member desired the election but the vote remained the same.
